

How to Sound Like a Native English Speaker

Post-session Reading and Vocab (higher)

Read the following extract from a BBC article, then discuss the questions below:

Accent could affect how intelligent people are thought to be, a new study suggests.

The study, which matched accents with intelligence, found speaking in a Birmingham accent makes people seem less intelligent than saying nothing at all.

Scientists at Bath Spa University asked 48 volunteers to compare accents.

Dr Lance Workman, who led the team of researchers, said that one of the reasons for doing the study "was to find out about stereotypes".

They compared the Yorkshire accent with those from Birmingham and also "Queen's English" (spoken by the Upper Class), while looking at photos of female models.

They then repeated the experiment in silence. While accents did not affect how beautiful the models seemed, it affected the intelligence rating a lot.

The silent test scored higher than the Birmingham "Brummie" accent, with the Yorkshire accent being rated the highest.

Questions

1. Do you have different accents in your language? What do you think of them?
2. Do you think that to work in radio or television it is important to have a particular accent?
3. How many different English language accents do you know?
4. Which is your favourite/least favourite?
